Founder & President, John Snow, Inc.

In international development and global health there is a wide gap between what academic research and policy makers support and what the field realities dictate. This lecture by Joel Lamstein, founder and president of John Snow, Inc., will outline those differences and explore how this gap might be bridged in order to develop more effective evidenced-based interventions. This event is co-sponsored by the USC Institute for Global Health, the Program on Global Health & Human Rights and the USC Price School of Public Policy. Lunch provided.
